

What is gender-based violence and abuse?

Gender-based violence is any form of violence or abuse that is directed at someone because of their gender.

Violence can take many forms, including:

- Domestic violence and abuse
- So called 'Honour-based' violence
- Female genital mutilation (FGM)
- Forced marriage
- Sexual violence
- Financial control
- Emotional and mental abuse
- Stalking and harassment
- Coercive and controlling behaviour

Gender-based violence is most often directed at women and girls, although men and boys can also be affected by the forms of violence listed above. It affects all cultures and societies, and can be carried out by: partners; family members; members of the community; strangers; armed groups; the state; and others.

Globally, around one in three women will be affected by gender-based violence at some point in their lifetime.

In the UK and Ireland, there are a range of agencies that can help and support people affected by violence and abuse, featured overleaf.

Abuse is ALWAYS wrong and NEVER acceptable. It is NEVER the victim's fault.

Ultimately, only the person experiencing abuse can decide what course of action to take.

If you are experiencing abuse there are a number of actions you could take:

- Contact the police or another appropriate agency if it is safe and appropriate to do so.
- If you feel it is safe to do so, disclose the violence to a trusted person.
- Seek support from a specialist agency, such as those listed in this leaflet.
- Make a safety plan to protect and increase the safety of yourself, and any children, either within an abusive relationship or if you decide to leave. Identify a safe place you can go to, store provisions, medication and documents that you will need and try to make any plans untraceable by your abuser.
- Keep a record of the violence (in a safe place) if appropriate in case you want to give evidence in the case of any prosecution.
